

Dauntsey's School

Complementary Curriculum and Personal, Social, Health and Economic Education Policy

Document compiled by Miss Anais Seager, Head of Complementary Curriculum

1. Introduction

As is the case in most educational institutions, the personal and social development of students takes place in a very wide variety of settings in which PSHE may or may not feature as an explicit aim of the activity. At Dauntsey's, these settings range from classroom atmosphere to the pastoral system, from Moonrakers to our anti-bullying programme and from religious services to ensemble work in music. In this document we set out the aims and methodology of timetabled Personal, Social, Health and Economic Education lessons and our Complementary Curriculum programme at Dauntsey's.

2. The Aims of Complementary Curriculum and PSHE.

1. To help students to become aware of their strengths, qualities and uniqueness and thus to develop their self-esteem.
2. To help them develop listening and communicating skills.
3. To help them discover strategies for changing behaviour and achieving personal goals.
4. To improve our students' academic, sporting, social and artistic performance by fostering the qualities and skills referred to in 1-3 above.
5. To teach them the skills needed to deal with difficult emotional and social situations and a safe place to practice them.
6. To introduce them to typical interactions in family, peer, friendship and work groups.
7. To make them aware of their current behaviour patterns, values and attitudes and how these impinge on other people in their lives, to foster empathy.
8. To help them extend their 'locus of control' by developing a sense of ownership of, and responsibility for, their values, feelings, behaviour and emotional health which will lead to personal autonomy.
9. To provide information which will enable students to make informed and healthy lifestyle choices, with particular references to sexual behaviour, legal and illegal drugs, smoking, alcohol, healthy eating and stress management.
10. To provide information about the pursuit and maintenance of good mental health.

11. To explain to pupils that success is not the inevitable outcome of endeavour and to encourage the development of the emotional resilience needed to cope with setbacks in life.
12. To prepare them for life outside school in which success in relationships at work and elsewhere will be critically dependent on the deployment of a repertoire of effective personal skills.
13. To combat stereotyping and prejudice of all kinds, enabling each person to maintain or develop their self-confidence.
14. To preserve and develop the school's anti-bullying culture, through specific lessons, by highlighting the problem of bullying and discussing the possible solutions available in school. To look at the wider implications of staying safe.
15. To foster the development of integrity, honesty, fairness, sensitivity, generosity, commitment, compassion, and respect for self and others in the local community and further afield.
16. To begin to foster sound principles of economic well-being.

3. The Objectives of Complementary Curriculum & PSHE

In summary, Complementary Curriculum aims to develop:

- a. the attributes of emotional literacy and personal autonomy
- b. knowledge which will enable students to choose healthy lifestyles
- c. attitudes which will be self-empowering, not self-oppressing
- d. skills which will enable them to develop and build worthwhile relationships
- e. their critical thinking and debating skills

so that our students can lead happy, healthy, productive and fulfilled lives at Dauntsey's and in the wider world beyond.

4. Complementary Curriculum and PSHE Teaching Methodology

Experiential Learning

The emphasis on 'helping pupils to discover

 rather than 'teaching' gives a key to the methods we use.

By experiential learning we mean processes in which students might discover for themselves that 'win-win' solutions to interpersonal problems are preferable to 'win-lose' outcomes as a result of witnessing or taking part in role play activities on assertiveness, or in another lesson, they could see for themselves that it is empowering to be able to say 'no' when exposed to an offer of an illegal drug or the temptation to have unpremeditated sex. We also use role-play to highlight the concept of self-talk which features prominently in our Year 9 work on self-esteem. Self-talk is another name for the constant background flow of internal thoughts which collectively form our values and attitudes and our aim here is to show students how negative attitudes – and the emotions they generate – can be replaced with positive ones. Through all of this, the experiential learning process comprises:

1. Starting from where the pupils are, by connecting with past experience
2. Reviewing and reflecting on that experience
3. Processing – analysing, exploring, considering new information and making links to it from past experience
4. Relating what has been learned to life at school and elsewhere

5. Practising new skills and applying what has been learned
6. Reviewing what has been learned

With active pupil involvement at every stage, it has often been said and written (and we subscribe to this) that in PSHE, the ‘how’ is more important than the ‘why’, so our schemes of work contain an important element of flexibility which encourages experiential learning to continue along pathways which may diverge from time to time before reaching their goal, and for the same reason, they may be found to be less prescriptive and detailed than schemes of work in some other subjects.

Group Work Techniques

Teachers use a selection of the following techniques as vehicles for the delivery of Complementary Curriculum:-

Pooling Ideas – working as a whole class of about 18, or in smaller groups. Students call out as many ideas as they can on a given topic in a short time (5 minutes max), for example ‘What comes into your head when you think of drugs?’ One person then records the responses on flipchart paper. All responses are written down without evaluation, which happens later – see e.g. rank ordering.

Rank ordering - can be used to prioritise ideas generated by students as above, or supplied by the teacher. The ‘diamond nine’ is often effective:

1		most important
2	next most important	next most important
3	of medium importance	of medium importance
4	not very important	not very important
5		least important

Students can work on this individually or in pairs or threes to prioritise the items and then explain their reasons for their choices to the whole class.

Carousel - half the class form a circle, seated or standing, facing outwards. The other half stand or sit in another circle around them, facing inwards. Students then elicit responses from the person they are facing before the outer ring moves two places clockwise so that everyone has a new partner. Besides addressing whatever issue is under discussion, this is an effective way to develop conversation skills.

Fishbowl – one group performs an activity while the other group sits and observes, perhaps with a checklist of things to look out for. The observer group gives feedback when the active group have finished. The groups then change round.

Opinion continuum – all students must expect to become involved here! Students must stand along a real or imaginary line between opposite sides of the classroom labelled ‘agree’ and ‘disagree’ at a position which represents their viewpoint on a statement read out by the teacher, and then be prepared to justify the position they have taken. This is a particularly suitable procedure to conclude and review units of work on –for example – drug or sex education.

Role play – this powerful technique requires careful preparation. Students must be told who and what they are expected to portray in a group of 2-5, but should be left to devise their own script and scenario. With experience gained in drama lessons at Dauntsey's, most students respond well to the challenge.

Sculpts – a variant of role play in which the focus is on empathising with other participants. Groups of students – or perhaps the whole class – are arranged in static positions by other students or a teacher to represent a scenario such as bullying on a bus, a happy family or an unfriendly classroom. As with role play, time is allocated for processing and de-roleing afterwards.

Circle time - a vital element of the programme which provides opportunities for pupils to have their own or more general problems listened to and addressed by a group seated in a circle with a teacher. At the start of the year, pupils draw up ground rules for these discussions so that they can take place in an atmosphere of emotional security.

Scripted fantasy – an invitation to explore experiences, feelings and beliefs through a guided imaginary journey, experience or situation

Games - can take many forms e.g. icebreakers at the start of a year, term or lesson, games requiring cooperation for success, games which develop trust, communication skills and self-esteem – or just for fun!

Sex Education

Sex education at Dauntsey's forms an integral part of the Complementary Curriculum programme. It is taught by our own staff, who have received training for this part of their role, rather than 'outside specialists' because we believe that any perceived reluctance on the part of Complementary Curriculum staff to address sensitive issues would be incompatible with one of the key aims of the programme, which is to promote an ability to discuss sexual matters without prurience or embarrassment. The only exception to this is the sexual health talk delivered by an outside speaker to the 5th and L6th Form.

Upper School Complementary Curriculum

The lesson delivery in these courses differs in that the pupils will benefit from a carousel of lessons on a broad range of topics. Pupils will be encouraged to consider issues beyond the standard curricula and will participate in group discussions following on either from whole year group presentations or teacher lead introductions.

5. Structure and Staffing

In many schools, tutors deliver pre-packaged units of PSHE to their tutor groups in form periods. We have chosen to avoid this mode of delivery, which is often as unpopular as it is ineffective, on the grounds that the commitment of form tutors to the values of PSHE - and therefore to the degree of confidence they feel in delivering the material – can vary over a wide range. In some other schools, attempts are made to deliver 'cross-curricular PSHE' over a range of other curriculum subjects but this suffers from the same drawback of variable staff commitment and adds lack of coherence and continuity. Instead, PSHE is taught at Dauntsey's by a team of teachers who believe in the importance of PSHE and share its core values.

The 2020/21 teaching team is as follows:

1st Year will be taught by Anais Seager.

2nd Year will be taught by Anais Seager and Liz Gardiner.

3rd Year will be taught by Anais Seager, Will Whyte.

4th Year will be taught by Anais Seager, Jo Worrall and Will Whyte.

5th Year will not be formerly taught PSHE but instead, will complete the schools' Complementary Curriculum programme, strands of which revisit and enhance provision already covered in the lower school

L6th Form will be taught by a mix of internal staff and external providers.

U6th Form will not receive any timetabled Complementary Curriculum lessons. However, there will be a number of outside speakers that will address the sixth form during their Complementary Curriculum programme, on PSHE related subjects.

6. Topics covered

The current Complementary Curriculum syllabus revisits important areas as the student's progress up the school. The rationale behind this spiral curriculum is that students mature at different rates and therefore certain issues may become more relevant to them at different times. The approach will also differ with age as will the level of knowledge and skills required. The Complementary Curriculum programme has developed through staff experience, input from students as well as conforming to the school's ethos and incorporating the five specific outcomes from the 'Every Child Matters' document.

Complementary Curriculum deals with the 3 Rs: Respect (for yourself and others), Responsibility (towards yourself and others) and Relationships.

Complementary Curriculum is a safe place to challenge and be challenged, to think for yourself, to learn how to listen to others and to accept their opinions even when you disagree. The early development and maintenance of mutually agreed ground rules is therefore essential. The whole class including the member of staff is bound by them and must include confidentiality with exceptions (if someone is in danger or if there is criminal activity), refer to the laminated poster in house areas; respect for people's opinions and the right to 'pass'.

As there is little written work in Complementary Curriculum positive verbal feedback to the student and if the pupil's work was particularly praiseworthy, feedback should be sent to the tutor. In the case of Lower School Complementary Curriculum merits can be given.

Selections of training courses run throughout the year. AS1 will pass on relevant details of courses on offer. Also, you are very welcome to attend any of the outside speakers' workshops if you are free, just let AS1 know.

Complementary Curriculum teaching incorporates the delivery of sessions on financial/economic education. Pupils in the First Form all receive a session in the life skills carousel called 'Money Matters' where they learn how to manage a bank account and learn and understand basic and essential banking terms. In the 4th Form, pupils will cover a range of lessons on personal finance, saving money, understanding taxation and the cost of living. The 5th Form pupils receive as part of their two-week carousel a module called 'Money Management' which covers budgeting, how to look after your money, points to consider when working or applying for jobs and how to make sensible financial decisions beyond Dauntsey's.

First Year Course

The topics listed here form the core of the course although, staff reserve the right to select additional or alternative material in response to the topicality of a school or wider issue, or to the varying demands, experience and abilities of different teaching groups. An additional and vital ingredient in years 7-10 is the provision that at least one lesson in each half term can be devoted to a structured Circle-Time discussion of any issue a pupil or teacher wishes to raise. The circle format emphasises the teacher's role as facilitator rather than source of all knowledge and wisdom.

VRM	Nuclear War: 'Understanding why we stand on the brink'
AS1	Relationships – responsibilities and parenthood

Radicalisation

As part of the carousel the 5th Form will receive a workshop on Radicalisation.

Anti-bullying week

The national Anti-bullying week takes place during the autumn term and is usually during November. All year groups, years 1 – 4, conduct anti-bullying activities within their PSHE programmes. However, during the anti-bullying week, all year groups co-ordinate to produce a display or to take part in a competition or other themed activity, in line with the national recognition of bullying as an issue.

The work conducted just prior or during this week is in addition to their continued anti-bullying work but linking to the national anti-bullying week helps to raise the profile and significance of the work that we do.

7. Pastoral links to the School PSHE programme

The Lower School and Upper School pastoral staff (House masters/mistresses and tutorial staff) are addressed at the start of the academic year in relation to the structure and delivery of the PSHE programme. The key topics and themes are outlined and staff are invited to take part in sessions as well as being asked to feed in ideas for current issues that they are aware of and feel need greater attention within PSHE lessons.

Staff are made aware of the location of SOW on the school intranet.

8. Dauntsey's Counselling Service

- Who are we?

The school counsellors are:

Carole Coupe and Ruth Archer

We are qualified counsellors who have a wealth of experience in working with both young people and adults across a wide range of issues.

- Why are we here?

We are employed in order to support both students and staff. Our training enables us to address the deeper or more complex issues that other members of staff would struggle with or do not have time to deal with adequately.

Our aim is to enable the 'client' to clarify their problem, to identify what needs to change in their situation and then to support them in making those changes which will enable them to move forward. We do not try to solve people's problems, working with them instead in finding their own solutions.

We are an addition to the network of pastoral support in place in the school through the teaching and non-teaching staff, enhancing this rather than replacing any aspect of it.

- How do we work?

We work one to one with individuals and also with groups. We liaise with parents and outside agencies such as Psychiatrists, GP's etc where necessary and appropriate.

Staff are encouraged to consult us in dealing with problems presented by the children they deal with and it may not always be necessary for us to work directly with the child.

Be assured that in referring to us this is not a sign of weakness or inefficiency on your part. We are not here to take anything away from you in your role as teachers, tutors or house staff. We do have a wide range of experience in dealing with emotional and mental health issues. That is what we are trained to do.

- How can you contact us to make a referral?

We are employed on an hourly part time basis and come in to school as and when we are needed so it is difficult to give definite times when you can catch us.

You can email us on the school system, speak to a tutor or Houseparent about arranging an appointment or drop in to the Medical Centre to arrange one.

Also, we are all contactable on the following numbers which all provide confidentiality:

Carole: 07967 875295

Do ring to refer or discuss a child.

- What issues do we cover?

Over the school year we may deal with relationship difficulties, loss of many kinds, eating disorders, self harm, stress, academic pressure, isolation and social problems etc

We may see someone only once or regularly over a period of time.

- When would we support staff?

When home or work stress whatever its nature becomes overwhelming and adversely affects your role and daily functioning, it can be helpful to work it through with one of us.

In order to provide privacy staff can be seen off the school premises if preferred.

- Confidentiality

We assure our 'clients' that what they say to us is confidential unless we believe that they are likely to seriously harm themselves or someone else or if there is a child protection issue when the school's Designated Safeguarding Lead will be informed. At present this is Mrs A Jackson with Miss E Conidaris and Mr G James deputising.

We encourage children to confide in their parents but in some cases parents are part of the problem so this is not possible.

Particularly in the case of boarders (especially Lower school boarders), it may be necessary to share information with house parents who are in loco parentis and may need to be alert to the child's needs. This will be strictly confidential within a trusted professional context.

Please do not hesitate to contact us if you feel we may be able to help in any way.

We are here to support you!

9. Health and Safety

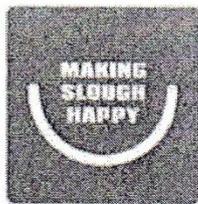

- All teaching staff must take the register for each lesson. If they are in doubt as to the whereabouts of a student, they are to use the phone or computer to check if they are in school, in the San or at a music lesson.
- All staff are to read the Evacuation and Major Incident procedures.
- All staff are to make sure that they are up to date on pupils who have specific learning difficulties and health issues.
